HISTORY OF BELMOND REIDS PALACE

Reid's Palace was the vision of William Reid, a Scotsman who dreamed of building a majestic hotel in Madeira. A retreat away from the chilly winters of northern Europe. Tragically, Reid died before it was completed. His two sons completed his dream.

The grand doors to Belmond Reid's Palace opened for the first time in 1891. Throughout its illustrious history, the hotel has welcomed many distinguished guests, including members of British and European royalty, presidents, politicians, actors and artists such as Empress Zita of Austria, King Edward VIII, Princess Stephanie of Monaco, actors Roger Moore and Gregory Peck and Czech poet Rainer Maria Rilke.

The hotel's Dining Room is known as the 'House of Lords' for the British aristocrats that frequented decadent dinner dances held there and Presidential Suites have been named after eminent guests George Bernard Shaw and Winston Churchill.

Over the last couple of decades the hotel has had quite a few renovations which has expanded the hotel's accommodation and facilities, as well as the continual preservation of the gardens, which were part of Reid's original vision.
